Wilson, of Iowa, Delivered in the Senate of the United States, Wednesday, December 12, 1883 We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundations on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. This general declaration of doctrine harmonizes with the reciprocal character of allegiance and protection. And it was because of this that the framers of our Constitution projected that definite and comprehensive declaration of purpose formulated in the preamble to that instrument in...
