Few performed autopsies or recorded descriptions that can be recognized. Nevertheless, their writings suggest that in many of the epidemics they must have been dealing with the same condition that has existed during the past winter. In the 16th century there were many epidemics throughout Italy, beginning in 1535 and sweeping over the whole peninsula. In Switzerland it was known as the malignant stitch, or Alpenstich, and by 1576 it had spread over Western Europe. The attack began with a chill, pain in the head and chest, and a cough which was at first dry but afterwards attended with expectoration. The patient became delirious or fell into a stupor; loose evacuations followed, and death occurred on the 6th or 7th day, or if the disease was protracted over the 9th day the prognosis was good. Massa described pleural effusions, and Coiter states that in all the cases which he described he found the lungs filled with putrid blood, turgid, and indurated, while Dodonaeus writes that abscesses were frequent in the lungs. In the 17th century there were similar epidemics, and several authors report finding serous and blood-stained effusions in the pleura and pericardium, and the lungs in part condensed, in part rendered diffluent by suppuration. In the 18th century, according to...
