Familiarize yourself with the laboratory rules. Upon their careful observance depend good work and your own safety. 2. Food must not be eaten in the laboratory; pencils, labels, or fingers must not be moistened with the tongue. 3. If any portion of a culture is spilt by accident upon the desk or floor, it should be covered immediately with a germicide (HgCl₂ 1:1000, or carbolic acid in 5 per cent solution). After this germicide has acted for 10 or 15 minutes, wipe it up and throw the cloth or paper into a waste jar. 4. In case the hands should come in contact with infectious material, they should be washed with one of the above mentioned germicides, and then scrubbed with soap and water. 5. The platinum needles used in making cultures should be sterilized in a flame before and after use, and before they are laid down. When the needles are covered with viscous material, as milk, for instance, they should be held at the side of the flame until dry before being sterilized. This will avoid the danger of scattering infectious material about the desk. 6. All possible care should be observed in handling apparatus, etc. Solid material should not be put into sinks. Burned matches, paper, cotton, broken glass, etc., should be put into crocks and not on the floor or into the sink. 7. Discarded cultures should be killed in the autoclave (5 minutes...
